come to set sech store by her, that when she was sick nothin would do for her but she must have Huldy round all the time, and the minister, he said he'd make it good to her all the same, and she shouldn't lese nothin' by it, and so Huldy, she staid with o' used to hevin' her 'round, taking care o' things, that he wanted her to stay along a spell—and so Huldy, she staid along a spell and poured out his tea, and mended his close, and made pies and cakes, and washed, and ironed; and kep' everything as neat as a pin-Huldy was a drefful chipper sort o' gal, and don't even kno gal, and work sort o' rolled off from her be a runnin' to waste!' like water off a duck's back. There warn't no gal in Sherburne that could put such a sight o' work through as Huldy, and yet, Sunday mornin', she always came out in the singers' seat like one o' these ere June roses, lookin' so fresh and smilin', and her voice was jest as clear and sweet as a mead ow lark's-Lord massy-I 'member how she used to sing some o' them are places where the trebble and counter used to go together, her voice kind o' trembled a little, and it sort o' went thro' and thro' a feller! tuck him right where he lived."

Here 'Sam leaned contemplatively back with his head in a clump of sweet fern, and efreshed himself with a chew of young wintergreen, boys, is jest like a fellar's thoughts o' things that happened when he was young—it comes up jest so fresh and tender every year the longest time you have to live, and you can't help chawin' on't tho' 'tis sort o' stinging, I don't never get over likin' young wintergreen.

"But about Huldsh, Sam?"
"O yes, about Huldy, Lody massy!
when a feller is Indianing round these ere pleasant summer days, a feller's thoughts gits like a flock o' young partridges, they's up and down and everywhere, cause one pisce is jest as good as another, when they's ell so kind o' comfortable and nice. Wal, about Huldy, as I was sayin', she was jest s handsome a gall to look at as a feller ould have, and I think a nice, well-behaved oung gal in the singers' seat of a Sunday a means o' grace, it's sort o' drawin' to the unregenerate, you know. Why, boys in them days, I've walked ten miles over to herburne of a Sunday mornin' jest to play ass viol in the same singers' seat with Huldy. She was very much respected, Huldy was, and when she went out to ailorin' she was allers bespoke six months head, and sent for in waggins up and down or ten miles round, for the young fellers was allers 'mazin' anxious to be sent after Juldy, and was quite free to offer to go for er. Wal, after Mis Carryl died, Huldy got o be sort o' housekeeper at the minister's, and saw to everything so that there warn't oin out of the way.

But you know how 'tis in parishes, here allers is women that thinks the min-ster's affairs belongs to them, and they ight to have the rulin' and guidin' of 'em, nd if a minister's wife dies, there's folks hat allers hes their eyes open on provie, lookin' out who's to be the next one. Now there was Mis Amaziah Peppedge, a widder with snappin' black eyes, and a hook nose, kind o' like a hawk, and was one o' them up and down, comandin' sort o' women, that feel that they we a call to be seein' to everything that on in the parish, and especially to the
